To teach is commonly defined as to educate or instruct. But truly good teaching goes way beyond the simple imparting of knowledge from teacher to student. Good teaching encourages, expands and inspires. In fact, recent research suggests that the quality of a teacher is the most important predictor of student success. Chelsea Patrick, 2007 FSMH Alumna, offers this insight.

“What I remember most about my years spent at Friends School are the incredible teachers that I had. They taught me to be passionate about what I believed in, challenged me to move beyond what I thought I could do, and supported me throughout my entire FSMH experience. My love of learning started at Friends School and I believe it was a gift given generously by the most dedicated teachers in the profession. I really can’t thank them enough.”

As a non-profit, independent school, only 90% of our annual operating costs are covered by tuition dollars and program fees; Friends School and the dedicated teachers who work here depend upon the generosity of its community to thrive. Please consider donating to our Annual Giving so our teachers and school can continue giving their best to our students.

“You must be the change you want to see in the world.”
